TV GUIDE ★ PICTORIAL

Foremost among the Academy Award presentations are the selection of best movie, actress and actor of the year. Shown here are scenes from the five films nominated for the Best Picture award ("The Lion in Winter," "Oliver," "Romeo and Juliet," "Rachel, Rachel" and "Funny Girl"), and three individual artists (Patricia Neal, Ron Moody and Cliff Robertson") who are considered top contenders for Best Performance awards. A complete list of nominations can be found on page 2, so you can keep your own score for the 1969 Academy Awards, Monday night at 10 on channel 7.

LAUGH IT OFF

"Just one pocket—I'm semi-retired."

Awards are a tradition, But they're a show, too

By CECIL SMITH
Press Special Writer

HOLLYWOOD — A cork wall in Gower Champion's office in the Goldwyn studios is a mad collage of brightly colored bits of paper in red, pink, blue, white, bearing such names as Sinatra, Diahann, Bergman, Matthau, Natalie, Streisand, Lancaster, Beatty, Jane.

To Gower's practiced eye the procession of bits of paper pinned on the wall is the complete ceremony of the presentation of the Awards of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, known familiarly as the running of the Oscars or the film industry's annual bash in celebration of itself.

I found Gower in a rather glum mood. "This started out as a labor of love," he said, "but it's becoming a labor of hate."

He laughed at himself and said: "Honestly, the frustrating thing about this whole show is the reason for the show itself — the giving out of those cotton-picking awards! Once you think you're getting somewhere, the show is moving, you've got to stop and hand out an Oscar.

"And then you've got to look at everything with two sets of eyes, two viewpoints. You're producing a show for 3,000 people in an auditorium and you're producing the same show for 60 million people on television. The TV audience is, of course, the most important — but you can't forget you're also playing to those people in the theater.

"And then," said Gower, "the nagging thought hits you at midnight that everybody in the world watches the show anyway to see who gets the Oscars, whether the show is good or a disaster. So why break your tail?"

Actually, Gower could not do otherwise than break his tail. He's a perfectionist, a tireless knitter-together of elusive strands to form the fabric of a show. The one-time dancing gypsy who with his wife Marge became a movie star and then the most incredibly successful director in the modern musical theater ("Hello, Dolly!," "Bye Bye Birdie," "I Do! I do"), is a theatrical alchemist turning gloss into gold.

When Academy president Gregory Peck persuaded Gower to produce the 41st annual Academy Awards ceremony Monday night (via ABC), the director laid down a series of conditions — that the ceremony be moved from Santa Monica Municipal Auditorium to a genuine theater, the glittering new Dorothy Chandler Pavilion of The Los Angeles Music Center, that he be in complete charge, reporting only to Peck and not saddled by committees, and that there be no master of ceremonies. Instead of an emcee, Gower has five hosts and hostesses, who will make all the presentations.

This is a glittering assemblage — Ingrid Bergman, Frank Sinatra, Diahann Carroll, Warren Beatty, Burt Lancaster, Jane Fonda, Walter Matthau, Natalie Wood, Sidney Poitier, Barbra Streisand — the names on those bits of paper.

To sing the nominated songs, Gower has corralled Jose Feliciano, Aretha Franklin, Abby Lincoln and Sinatra. Juliet Prowse will dance "Chitty Chitty Bang Bang" with the UCLA marching band — Gower shudders at the idea of singing the song.

Gower has become disenchanted with theater; he's interested in both television and movies. He will tape a Julie Andrews special with Harry Belafonte in May for next season; he's currently preparing to direct the movie version of "I Do! I Do!" with Dick Van Dyke.

Film rights Acquired

NEW YORK (AP) — Film rights to "A Small Town in Germany," a new novel by John LeCarre, have been acquired by Avco Embassy Pictures of Canada for filming to begin this year on locations in Europe. A previous novel by LeCarre, "The Spy Who Came In From The Cold," has been made into a movie and another, "The Looking Glass War," is shooting now.

The new novel concerns a minor British official in Germany who disappears with secret documents crucial to Great Britain's, entering the Common Market.

Some turn To art for Fun in life

NEW YORK Take 2 Buyers Banking on Art: collections.

"They want more out of life and they turn to art to find it," said Fleischman, a private collector since he was 18. "Some people turn to alcohol and drugs and others turn to art. I've seen people who started out buying $300 lithographs end up buying a $100,000 work. After all, in today's society, anyone can afford $1,000 a year. It's just a question of how you want to spend it."

The dealers say the speculators, the men who equate a Renoir with Standard Oil, only slightly influence the spiralling prices.

Fleischman said four groups had come to him within the last two years and asked him to act as their broker. They didn't care what he bought for them as long as it made a profit.

"People like that I kick out of here," said Fleischman, who believes the art experience is like the religious experience.

"Others, who may have investment in the back of their minds, but are still interested in good art, I try and convert," he said.

New mining method

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Gold mines are experimenting with pumping ore mixed with water from below ground to see if recovery of metal can be increased. Four massive pumps are moving a slurry mixture up from 7,200 feet in Vaal Reefsmine to the surface.

Gold ore is usually broght to the surface dry. If the experiment is succesful, other mines are expected to crush material underground and pump it out mixed with water.

MacGraw wins Cinderlla title

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP) — Hollywood has a new Cinderella every season, and this year's Cinderella is Ali MacGraw.

Ali is the Manhattan fashion model who was picked from more than 100 aspirants, many of them well-known actresses, to play the lead of Brenda in the film version of Philip Roth's prizewinning book, "Goodbye, Columbus."

"I still find the situation incredible," she said, speaking of her debut as a star. "I thought I had been passed over several times. I wasn't even among the first four who were selected to be sent to Holywood for film tests."

But she survived the winnowing, and if the picture achieves its predicted box-office success the future looks bright indeed for her.

However, Ali—a family abbreviation for Alice—is one Cinderella who isn't swept off her feet by the glamor of it all. She calls herself an incurable romantic, but she might be more aptly termed a practical idealist.

"What impels me most is simply the fantastic sensation of being alive. I'm not hedonistic in a frenzied way. But every single solitary thing in life interests me.

"I don't know for sure where I want to go. What's more important than where I go is the process of getting there. Every second is worth something, whether it's happy or sad."

Miss MacGraw is a sprightly young lady, gazelle slender, 5 feet 8 inches tall, with dark shoulder-length hair and eloquent dark eyes. Her long, tapering fingers are eloquent, too, and she keeps her hands in almost constant movement as she speaks.

Behind her dramatic beauty lies a fine brain. Daughter of a father and mother who work as commercial artists, she herself is a talented artist, a graduate of Wellesley College, and can speak French, Italian and Russian.

"In college I didn't know what I wanted to do," she remarked. "I liked—and still like—to do a lot of things.

"I became a fashion assistant at a woman's magazine, but the excitement wore off quickly. I decided I didn't want to spend my life working with 75 women hung up on how they looked."

Ali then became a stylist and researcher for Melvin Sokolsky, the commercial photographer, where her duties ranged from authenticating backgrounds to ironing the hair ribbons for models. Then she became a model herself, working for both television and magazines. In her spare time she took acting lessons and continued her language studies.

"Modeling is a good field," she said, "because you can do very little of it and earn enough to pay your skeletal costs and still have time left to do everything you really want to.

"I like to have time to myself. I'd hate to have to work on a nine-to-five job. I don't feel you have to have a big-paying job to feel your life is justified. If I like what I'm doing—that's what counts."

Actress, 60, returns To 'old' Hollywood

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "Come and meet those dancing feet .m. "On the avenue I'm taking you to ...

"Forty-second Street ... "

The orchestra spontaneously struck up the anthem from the classic 1933 musical, "42nd Street," It was a rare, sentimental moment, for Ruby Keeler had just walked onto the movie set.

Fittingly enough, the sound stage was at Warner Brothers, where the winsome star had tapped her way through "42nd Street,'' "Golddiggers of 1933,'' ''Footlight Parade," "Dames," "Flirtation Walk" "Go Into Your Dance,'' "Shipmates Forever," etc., etc.

The set she visited harked back to the same period. It was for the ABC - Palomar production of "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?" which centers around the marathon dance craze of the 1930s. Miss Keeler had come to visit her sister, who is an extra in the Jane Fonda movie.

***

Later in an interview, Miss Keeler said she believed it was the first time she had returned to Warner Brothers since the year when she and Dick Powell headed the studio's musical stock company. But then she is a trifle vague about that part of her past. Ask her which was her favorite film, and she replies:

"Gee, I don't remember. They were all so much alike."

Ruby Keeler is 60 this year, but doesn't look it. The figure is still trim, the skin smooth and tanned, thanks to daily golf sessions at Newport Beach, where she has long lived. Her husband, John Lowe, died recently. Her famous legs?

"They seem to be holding up," she smiled. "Golf helps. I don't tapdance any more—why should I? But if I had to tap for a television show, I could handle it. At least I wouldn't have any problem the first day. You know how it is when you exercise: the first day is fine. Only on the second and third days do the muscles start to feel it."

Miss Keeler was a Zigfeld star on Broadway, then came to Hollywood during the musical cycle created by the advent of talkies. She was then married to Al Jolson, and their life together was told in a highly fictionized version in "The Jolson Story".

"I never saw the picture," said Miss Keeler. "From what I've heard about it, the story was far from the truth. I suppose I should have been more careful, but the people at Columbia said if I didn't sign a release they would go ahead and use a completely fictional wife.

Miss Keeler retired from films in 1941 after a dismal film called "Sweetheart of the Campus"—"it was so bad I had no regrets about quitting."

TV credibility at new peak

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Television's credibility as a news medium stands at an all-time high, according to "A Ten-Year View of Public Attitudes Toward Television and Other Mass Media," a report to the Television Information Office from Roper Research Associates. The data was announced in a presentation by TIO Director Roy Danish to the National Association of Broadcasters convention today.

The national study, sixth of a series begun in 1959, was based on personal interviews with 1995 adults, 21 years of age and over, during November 14-23, 1968. Among its major findings were these:

...Television is the most believable news medium, leading newspapers 2-to-1.

...Television's margin over the second medium as people's primary source of news was the biggest ever.

...Television coverage of riots and violence in television entertainment programs ranked far down the list in the public's view of possible causes of increased crime and violence.

...The public indicated that it gained the clearest understanding of candidates and issues in the national elections from television, leading newspapers by over 2-to-1.

...Viewing hours per day set new highs for the total sample, the college educated and upper income groups.

...The public favors the present balance between news-public affairs and entertainment programming.

...Again, as in 1964 and 1967, the public agreed, 8-to-1, that having commercials on television is a "fair price to pay for being able to view."

In answer to a question regarding their most believable source of news, 44 per cent of respondents named television; 21 per cent, newspapers; 11 per cent magazines; 8 per cent radio.

Asked where they got most of their news about what's going on in the world, viewers put television in first place, as they have done since 1963. Television received 59 per cent; newspapers 49 per cent; radio 25 per cent; magazines 7 per cent. (Total exceeds 100 per cent because multiple answers were accepted.)

Roper also reported that television led in exclusive mentions as the primary news source. While 19 per cent of the sample mentioned only newspapers, 29 per cent mentined only television. The percentage mentioning both television and newspapers was 25. Newspapers and other media but not television were mentioned by 5 per cent, and television and other media but not newspapers were also mentioned by 5 per cent.

To determine beliefs about major causes of crime and violence in the nation, respondents were asked to rate 12 possible causes including television news coverage of riots and crime, violence in television entertainment and ten other possible causes. Television news ranks ninth and television entertainment eleventh out of the twelve possibilities offered.

Heading the list of factors by percentage of respondents considering them very important causes of crime and violence were: A general breakdown in respect for authority, law and order, 74 per cent; use of drugs, 68 per cent; laws that are too lenient or not letting police do their job, 64 per cent; bad examples set by parents, 60 per cent; Conflict between whites and blacks, 50 per cent; poverty and poor housing, 43 per cent. The second half comprised: Youthful rebellion, 42 per cent; theatres showing movies with violence and sex, 39 per cent; coverage of riots and crime on TV news, 35 per cent; coverage of riots and crime in newspapers, 30 per cent; violence in TV entertainment, 27 per cent; and the War in Vietnam, 26 per cent.

A question on possible government involvement with news programs on television drew a strong anti-control vote. Seventy-six per cent said government should not have control of TV news, while only 11 per cent favored it. In the college-educated group the vote was 92 per cent opposed to a government control, vs. 5 per cent favoring it.

Use of the medium continues its slow but steady increase, Burns W. Roper, president of the research company, reported. Median hours of viewing per day reported by the typical adult was up from 2:41 in 1967 to 2:47 in 1968. Among the college-educated the increase was from 2:10 to 2:17 and in the upper income group from 2:21 to 2:24.

The public has a higher regard for programming this year, Roper observed. Twenty-three per cent said programs were better today than a year ago and 44 per cent said they were about the same. In the January 1967 study the figures were 20 and 39, respectively. "For a medium that must serve all groups and cater to all interests, the public gives television generally good marks for program balance," Roper said. Six out of ten — 59 per cent — like the present balance, 23 per cent want more news and public affairs and 11 per cent want more entertainment.

The public reported greater awareness of editorializing by stations. The 35 per cent which reported seeing editorials in 1964 increased to 49 per cent in 1967 and 52 per cent in 1968. The vote in favor of editorializing was 53 per cent in 1964 and increased to 62 per cent in 1967 and 63 per cent in 1968. Among those who were familiar with broadcast editorials, the per cent in favor of editorials increased to 79 per cent. Editorial endorsement of candidates by stations received less support, the vote being split evenly pro and con.

In the political sphere, 65 per cent said that television was the major source of news about national candidates, compared with 24 per cent for newspapers, 4 per cent for radio and 5 per cent for magazines. For state offices, television again led with 42 per cent, compared to 37 per cent for newspapers, 6 per cent for radio, 9 per cent for other people and 1 per cent for magazines. For local offices, newspapers led with 40 per cent, followed by television with 26 per cent, 6 per cent for radio, 23 per cent for people and 1 per cent for magazines.

On the negative side, Roper found a generalized decrease in public satisfaction with local institutions per se — with television and also with newspapers, schools and government.

Television stations dropped seven points to the same percentage they received in 1961, their previous low mark. However, the ratings of local schools, newspapers and government as excellent or good were all lower than ever before in any of the previous studies.

An overall question on media — which one would you most want to keep? — again puts television in the lead. The 1968 figures are: television, 50 per cent; newspapers, 24 per cent; radio, 17 per cent; and magazines, 5.

In the commercial area, there was little change in attitude. By 3-to-2 they like rather than dislike most commercials. Regarding the concept of commercials being a fair price to pay, 80 per cent agreed with it while only 10 per cent disagreed.

The new report will be published in booklet form about May 1. The Roper surveys, commissioned by TIO, have been using identical questions to establish trends in the public's attitudes since 1959. The field staff uses a multi-staged, stratified, area probability sample representing a nationwide cross sample of adults 21 and over. The results of past Roper surveys for TIO have been confirmed by several independent studies. The Roper organization was founded by Elmo Roper, who came to national notice when he predicted the Presidential election of 1946 within one per cent of the popular vote. It now serves many corporations and organizations.

The Television Information Office was established in 1959 by the National Association of Broadcasters to serve as a two-way bridge between the television industry and its many publics. The office, at 745 Fifth Avenue, New York City, provides reference and information services; publicizes programs of special interest; conducts research on public attitudes toward television; and issues Publications and audio-visual materials on the structure and operation of the industry.

De Kooning still enigmatic

By MILES A. SMITH

NEW YORK (AP) — Through a current exhibition and a monograph, Willem de Kooning is presented as an artist full of contradictions. He has managed to be both an abstractionist and a figure painter, and there are some elements of expressionism in his works.

The exhibition, the most comprehensive review of his works ever assembled, is at the Museum of Modern Art through April 27. It consists of 147 paintings, drawings, pastels and collages. In point of time it ranges from the mid-1930s to 1967.

It was shown first at the Stedelijk Museum in Amsterdam and then at the Tate Gallery in London. From New York it will move to the Art Institute of Chicago (May 17-July 6) and the Los Angeles County Museum of Art (July 29-Sept. 14).

* * *

The show was organized by Thomas B. Hess, editor of Art News, who also wrote the accompanying monograph. The show and the book both are titled simply with the artist's name.

Hess describes de Kooning as an artist who balks at systems and ideologies, shies away from artistic conclusions and bases his approach to his work on ambiguity.

Because de Kooning has become relatively famous in recent years, after many years of obscurity as an artist's artist, many art lovers are familiar with his half dozen series of paintings of the archetypal Woman, but may be less familiar with his abstractions. Both classes are well represented in the exhibit.

The artist has been noted for re-working his oils, and often leaving them unfinished, in the sense that he was not satisfied with them. Hess sees this trait as a desire to "put everything into his painting," which resulted in "bringing new ambiguities and contradictions into the arena of the painted surface."

Hess says in the monograph that "there is no doubt that de Kooning by temperament dislikes conclusions almost as much as he hates systems.

"As might be expected from an artist who makes ambiguity a hypothesis on which to build, he has never belonged to a team and rejects the commands of various ideologues who want everybody to pick sides."

De Kooning and his friend Arshile Gorky "were associated with the abstract artists socially and intellectually, but they both did figurative pictures along with the abstractions," Hess declares.

* * *

The artist's works, he says do not fall into periods.

"The point is that unlike Picasso, for example, whose 'periods' follow each other in chronological sequence," de Kooning "keeps as many possibilities going at the same time as he can, each feeding the other, each in a sense inhabiting the other. So a division of his works into types could result in the ultimate parody of art-historical periodicity in which there are as many periods as there are pictures," says Hess.

"The artist keeps himself open, available to all possibilities and any contradictions."

As for the painter's more recent works, they appear once again to be a mixed lot.

After doing his third series of Women in the early 1950s, he turned to abstract urban landscapes and abstract parkway landscapes. He returned to the theme of the Women in the 1960s.

Since about 1965 he has kept two branches of his art going— Women in the Country and abstract countryside landscapes.

The word now is that de Kooning has lightened his colors, beginning about 1963, and is letting sunlight into his work.

The writer concludes that "the late Women are distorted, which makes them seem expressionist," but makes the point that expressionism "includes an attitude about the outside world," whereas de Kooning "looks at his environment as coolly as Cezanne; his distortions come from inside, from his art."

Singer-writers rank high Among top record artists

By MARY CAMPBELL

There's good news — that means new records—for the followers of the singer-writers. "Songs from a Room," by Leonard Cohen on Columbia, is his second LP, a little more than a year after "Leonard Cohen," which contains his song "Suzanne." And there are two new Tim Hardin albums.

"Songs from a Room" already is being played heavily on up-to-the-minute New York radio stations. After we all listen carefully and repeatedly to the images in the lyrics by the Canadian poet, we may decide there are one or two songs we like as well as "Suzanne."

"Birds on the Wire" is a possibility, with its memorable melody and refrain, "I tried in my way to be free." So is "Tonight Will Be Fine," in which the girl still loves, the man has dropped out of love, but things are still okay temporarily.

We also like "The Old Revolution;" "You Know Who I Am," which sounds autobiographical and is about a man who likes to change from nothing to one; and "Lady Midnight." We have not decided yet who Lady Midnight is, and don't care.

These songs presumably were written in one of the rooms in a cheap old hotel, which Cohen likes, believing that they have as much individuality as rooms in a very expensive old hotel. No middle class plastic laminated sufaces in the sensitive Leonard Cohen's hotel rooms and— listeners can be grateful—none in his songs and poetry.

Tim Hardin has signed with Columbia and in his first album for the company he has chosen to write a tribute to his wife and the fulfillment that he finds with her and their son. The album is titled "Suite for Susan Moore and Damion—We Are—One, One, All in One." The whole album is indeed one suite, plotted from beginning to end on a single theme.

Hardin has been performing some of these as separate songs, and of course he wrote them all. But on the album they all obviously belong together.

The LP begins with him singing about "the only girl I wanted to stay," moves along to marriage, "everything good became more true," then to the helpless, awesome emotion of becoming a parent.

"The Last Sweet Moment of Childhood Sleep" is a touching song which must come from Hardin's own memories, sensations now shared by his son Damion. The liveliest song is the last, "One, One, the Perfect Sum."

If you want to know where Hardin is now—his personal statement, and where he is as writer and performer, this is the album for you. Hearing conversations at a recent Hardin appearance, however, we know that there are fans who prefer where Hardin was recently to the more rambling phrasings of where he is now.

After his April 1968 concert at New York's Town Hall, Verve issued its third Tim Hardin album, "Live in Concert." The company apparently taped enough to get still another album out of it—which we didn't expect—and is now issuing "Tim Hardin 4," also from that concert.

"The Great Electric Experiment Is Over," by Noel Harrison is on Reprise, has Harrison getting into the contemporary scene. He sings some songs he wrote, like "The Ruins of the City Are in Flower Now;" "Don't Think Twice" by Bob Dylan; "Hello Sun" by Eric Andersen, which is a call to forget cares and fears and move into the simple life. He has chosen good writers to sing—Joni Mitchell, Fred Neil, Buffy Sainte-Marie, Donovan.

The songs he wrote are good, in keeping with a "drop away from the establishment" philosophy. In "The World Goes Round and Round," Harrison studies a spider.

***

In the realm of singers-not-writers, we recommend three. "Wonder Where I'm Bound," by Dion on Columbia, has Dion, now making a successful comeback, with a country catch in his voice but no country accent. An influence of Dylan can be heard.

Dali, astronauts honored In commemorative stamps

By SYD KRONISH

W. C. Handy, internationally recognized as the "father of the blues," will appear in his familiar pose playing the trumpet on a new U.S. 6-cent postage stamp scheduled for issuance on May 17. First-day ceremonies will be held in Memphis, the city Handy musically immortalized and which is celebrating its sesquicentennial.

The horizontal stamp will combine purple, light red and light blue for a "jazzy" effect. Against a purple background is Handy with horn in pink. The design was by Bernice Kochan of Cleveland, winner of a nationwide contest sponsored by the Memphis Sesquicentennial Inc. Her design is based on the bronze statue of the composer - musician which stands in Handy Park, on the corner of Beale and Third Sts., the mecca for jazz musicians.

Handy's first hit song was "Memphis Blues," published in 1912. Another famous tune was "St. Louis Blues." Born in Florence, Ala., Nov. 16, 1873, Handy died in New York on March 28, 1958.

Collectors desiring first-day cancellations may send their addressed envelopes, together with remittance to cover the cost of the stamps to be affixed, to the Postmaster, Memphis, Tenn. 38101. The outside envelope should be endorsed "First Day Covers 6 Cent W. C. Handy Stamp." Cover requests must be postmarked no later than May 17.

A last-minute change has been announced by U.S. Postmaster General Winton M. Blount in the design of the stamp commemorating Apollo 8. The words "In the beginning God ..." are being added in the center of the stamp.

The use of this phrase had not originally been considered in connection with the Apollo 8 stamp, but the postmaster general received so many requests that he decided to make the addition.

The quoted words were spoken by astronaut William A. Anders when he read from Genesis during the course of the historic flight orbiting the moon.

As previously mentioned in this column, the Apollo 8 stamp will be issued May 5 in Houston.

Speaking of U.S. stamps, Edwin Michelson of Peoria, Ill., has asked me to list the upcoming U.S. stamps for 1969. The present schedule includes the following: Apollo 8 at Houston on May 5; W. C. Handy at Memphis, Tenn., on May 17; 6-center honoring the 200th anniversary of the settlement of California at San Diego on July 16; plus unannounced dates and places for the 150th anniversary of Alabama Statehood, centenary of intercollegiate football, 11th international Botanical Congress, folklore series (Grandma Moses), 50th anniversary of the National Easter Seal Society, centenary of Maj. Wesley Powell's Colorado River voyage; and the 200th anniversary of Dartmouth College. Information and details on these and others will appear in this column as they become available.

Guyana loves Salvador Dali. For the second time that nation has depicted one of Dali's paintings on a postage stamp. This one has "The Sacrament of the Last Supper," which now hangs in the National Gallery of Art in Washington.

For a 96-page booklet, "Amazing but True Stories Behind the Stamps," including a packet of 50 stamps from far-away lands, send 75 cents to "Stamp Booklet," Name of This Paper, c-o H. E. Harris & Co., Box 2, AP, Boston, Mass. 02217.

Snakes net cash

LONDON (AP) — Naturalist Constantine Ionides, who died last year at his home in Tanzania, left $118,531 in his will in London—most of it earned from catching snakes.

Ionides supplied London Zoo with serpents. Some of the deadliest snakes in Britain were caught by him.

Watts celebrates Post-riot theater

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It might seem odd to have a dedication ceremony for a theater marquee, but in the case of the Watts Movie House, the event seemed reasonable.

The brief ceremonies took place one morning last week on East 103rd Street, which rampaging mobs took apart in the Negro riots of four years ago. One of the journalists who covered the story was David I. Zeitlin of Life magazine. He noted that Watts hadn't a single movie theater.

"Originally there had been 17 movie houses in southeast Los Angeles," says Zeitlin, now a producer for Universal. "But they had all been closed down. The blacks considered them merely an extension of the white establishment and hence they were against them."

Zeitlin believed something should be done to bring film entertainment to Watts, and he began soliciting help from influential persons in the movie industry. For two years the industry supported a low-cost movie program at a junior high school. But seeing movies at a school didn't appeal to the Watts youth, and the project folded.

The campaign for a Watts theater continued. Cash donations came from Robert Wise, Sidney Poitier, Paul Newman and other film figures. National General Corp., operator of theater chains, donated a projector and seats. Columbia Pictures provided a sound system. The Southern California Gas Co. gave a heating and air conditioning system.

The site of the theater was significant: It had been a supermarket before being gutted by fire in the 1965 riots.

The prime movers in the campaign for the Watts Movie House gathered in front of the building to dedicate the brand new $5,000 marquee. Among them were Councilman Tom Bradley, who also happens to be running for mayor of Los Angeles; Ed Goff of Watts Urban Design Workship, which will direct the refurbishing of the building; Bruce Corwin of Metropolitan theaters; Harry Dolan, now a successful script writer after having been discovered in the Watts Writers Workshop.

Also present was author Budd Schulberg, who founded the Writers Workshop shortly after the riots. It now has branches in nearby Long Beach, Altadena and Pasadena, as well as Seattle, San Francisco and Washington, D.C. Schulberg told the small crowd:

"This whole thing started in a pantry of a house just around the corner from here four years ago. What we found was a lot of talent going to waste, and we wanted to do something about it. One of our dreams was to have a place for talent to be seen and heard. This theater was the result of that dream."

The former supermarket has been used to develop new plays, including "Big Time Buck White," currently appearing off Broadway. Now it will also be used, said Schulberg, "to show the best of black films and the best of white films."

The renovation, to be done mostly with Watts labor, is expected to take two months. First run films will provided free of charge by the movie companies, and a minimum admission charge will admit Watts residents to thte 400-seat theater.

"We've done everything we could do," said one of the speakers at the dedication. "Now it's up to the people of Watts to make it a success."
